This proposal for Peabody provides 400 new homes on the Archway Campus of the Whittington Hospital. The proposal, which retains the distinctive Holborn Building at its heart, incorporates a green screen around the perimeter to form a buffer between surrounding roads and the new development. This green buffer defines a quieter urban village which is pedestrian-prioritized and focused around a series of pocket parks to provide a tranquil environment for residents. The design was a key part of the selection process for Peabody's Major Projects Panel. Bell Phillips architects is one of nine architects who have been selected to this panel to deliver 5,000 new homes.
